

The Hastings Center's President Mildred Solomon and the Center's Board of Directors

Invite you to a talk by

THOMAS H. MURRAY

President Emeritus of The Hastings Center

about his recent book

Good Sport:

Why Our Games Matter and How Doping Undermines Them

Murray, one of the world's leading experts on the ethics of doping in sports, will discuss why athletes use performance enhancers, the tactics for curbing their use, and concerns about the legitimacy and fairness of anti-doping efforts. Among the questions he will explore:

- What's actually wrong with doping—if all athletes had access to the same performance-enhancing drugs, wouldn't that make competitions fair?
- If the purpose of sport is to maximize performance, shouldn't we welcome technologies that do that?
- How should the values that give our lives meaning shape how, and whether, we use biomedical "enhancements"?

Mildred Solomon will moderate the event.

■ Presentation and discussion: 4:00-5:00 PM

■ Reception and book signing: 5:00-6:00 PM

Thomas H. Murray was president of The Hastings Center from 1999 to 2012. Previously, he was the director of the Center for Biomedical Ethics in the School of Medicine at Case Western University, where he was also the Susan E. Watson Professor of Bioethics.
