

Nancy Berlinger, PhD, is a Research Scholar at The Hastings Center. Her research focuses on ethical challenges in health care work, inclusive of clinical ethics, health care organizational ethics, and related areas of public health and human rights. Her current projects and other research activities address decision-making and care concerning people with life-threatening or chronic illness; access to health care for undocumented immigrants and other low-income migrant workers, ethical challenges in safety-net health care systems; and the ethics of workarounds and other improvised practices for managing problems of safety and harm in health care systems.
